Dxt Commodities, a Swiss commodity trader operating internationally and specialized in the management of renewable power, has acquired a significant share of the Italian start-up Wesii.

Established in 2016 by a team of people with international experience in optical and multispectral analyses, Wesii carries out aerial inspections using drones equipped with thermal and infrared sensors that are able to conduct high-quality analyses mainly exploited in the renewable sector. With this acquisition, Dxt Commodities intends to expand its range of services to meet the increasingly complex requests of renewable power plants owners, which include sophisticated monitoring, predictive analysis of potential failures and constant support to the analysis of a plant's profitability.

Dxt Commodities' corporate legal team, led by the general counsel Federico Piccaluga (pictured), worked on all the legal aspects of the acquisition. Following the deal, Piccaluga has also become Wesii's non-executive director.
