Daniel Weber joined the Wenger & Vieli in Zurich. As a counsel, he is primarily dedicated to the areas of banking and financial market law.

He advises and represents Swiss and foreign banks, asset managers and investment funds in regulatory, supervisory and contractual law issues and supports them in admission procedures, the law firm specifies. Another focus of his work is advising and representing clients in connection with internal and regulatory investigations by domestic and foreign authorities as well as in complex compliance matters, including money laundering and corruption.

Weber has been the deputy head of internal investigations at UBS Switzerland for the past four years. Weber names compliance, white collar crime law, internal investigations and whistleblowing matters as focus areas. Before UBS, Weber had worked for Finma in enforcement. After completing his studies, he worked at Homburger. Since this year he has also been part-time department head and public prosecutor of the Swiss military judiciary.
